Re: Sample Interview Questions

Brent and Lauren:

This letter provides an overview of the interview process for a marriage-based adjustment of status application.

The Day of the Interview

Your interview will likely take place in the Milwaukee Field Office in downtown Milwaukee. USCIS schedules interviews in “time blocks”: more than one couple is scheduled for any given time slot during the day and, within that time frame, couples are seen on a first-come, first-serve basis. Therefore, the earlier you arrive on the day of your interview, the earlier your interview will take place within your time slot. Your time slot will be indicated in your notice of interview.

You should plan to arrive in Milwaukee several hours ahead of your interview. While you can reschedule interviews in cases of emergencies, such as a transportation problem on the way to Milwaukee, that can severely delay your case. USCIS does not take kindly to interview rescheduling – particularly not in the last minute – so it should be left as a last resort. If your interview is early in the morning, you should arrive in Milwaukee the night before.

Both of you will need to attend the interview. In easier cases, meaning cases where there is significant evidence of an existing relationship, USCIS officers will interview the couple together. However, in some cases, USCIS officers choose to interview the couple separately. If USCIS does interview you separately, there is no need to worry: it is not an indication of the strength of your petition.

The purpose of interviews in marriage-based adjustment of status cases is to confirm that the relationship is real, and not just a way to obtain a green card. Therefore, most of the questions USCIS officers ask have to do with determining how well you two know each other, and how well you two can describe your lives together since you met.

Below are several sample interview questions that you two could get in the adjustment of status interview. Please note that these questions are only estimates of what could be asked: USCIS interviewers can ask virtually anything they want upon reviewing your file, and do not have to cover any particular topic.

The Questions in the Interview

- What is your current address?
- Who lives at your address?
- What your cell #?
- What is your spouse's cell #?
- What is your spouse's date of birth?
